JOEL T. HART.

Reflections Upon the Failure of the Proposition to Mark His Grave.

"Strangers sang our sculptor's praises,
In rare flowers his tomb was dressed,
But 'neath bluegrass sod and daisies,
We have brought him home to rest."

So run the lines which Mrs. Rosa Vertner Jeffrey penned in honor of Kentucky's only great sculptor, and which were read to the throng that gathered to do him honor one June day nearly five years ago, at the spot where his dust had been laid away in the lovely God's Acre at Frankfort.

It was an inspiring sight. Blue skies were overhead, and far down below wound the gleaming river. All the glory of a Kentucky June burst from tree and bush and greenward, carolled in the song of birds and rioted in the fragrance of countless flowers. Far away was the town with its prose of life; up there where the party had gathered was only the poetry and restfulness of death. The tall old trees whispered of peace as they rustled their branches in the wooing murmur of the nodding bluegrass. A wanderer has been brought home to rest after weary labors in a breeze, and peace was in the breath of the honeysuckle and in the shin-foreign land. He had sought fame and had won it, and the sod that gave him forth obscure and unknown, took him back again full of fame and of honor. Upon the spot where lies the dust of so many of the distinguished dead of our Commonwealth, an illustrious company had gathered to witness the ceremonies with which he was laid away in an honored tomb. The Governor and State officials were there, and eminent men and women from every part of the Commonwealth, and songs were sung and poems read and addresses delivered, in honor of the home-coming, for an eternal rest, of the Stone-cutter of Clark county.

That was five years ago. In the light of recent events, all that solemn scene seems a mockery. Mrs. Jeffrey's poem needs revision. We did not bring Joel T. Hart "home to rest;" we brought his dust back from Italy that we might thrust it away into an unmarked grave and give the world proof how little we are capable of appreciating anything in the way of great achievements, unless it has a political side to it, or boasts a pedigree and a fast record. We went to the expense of sending across the ocean for the remains of a man of whom we think too little to now complete the work by marking the place of his burial with a suitable grave stone.

It is significant that in one of the addresses delivered at the interment of Hart's remains at Frankfort, reference was made to the disinterment, by the restored Bourbons in France, of the bones of Rousseau and Voltaire from their resting place in the Pantheon, that they might be dumped into an unmarked pit in an open field, as a mark of royal hatred and contempt. The case was cited then as a contrast; it may be more fitly cited now as a parallel. We have taken the bones of Joel T. Hart from an honored grave in a land that loved, appreciated and honored him—from Italy, the Pantheon of Art—and have dumped them into an unmarked grave, so to give to all mankind a token of our contempt for art, and of our sordid, niggardly spirit.—"Morgan," in Owensboro Inquirer.

A nine-year-old boy, in knee breeches, walked into the Wyandotte National Bank, at Kansas City, Kansas, the other day and asked the teller if he had any coppers. The teller said he had. Then the boy poked a big pistol through the window and remarked: "Hand them out hand them out!" The teller did not respond so promptly as the youngster deemed consistent, and he pulled the trigger. The pistol snapped but did not explode, and the other bank employes grabbed the boy. He was taken before the justice, who discharged him with a sound lecture.

When you hear a man sneering at local papers because they are not as big, cheap and newsworthy as other papers, you can safely bet that he does not waste his wealth in trying to make them better, and that generally the papers have done more for him than he has for them. The man who can not see the benefit arising to a county from newspapers has a very short-sighted vision.

Free Turnpike Roads.

The following resolution, introduced in the House by Mr. Dickson, of Bourbon county, and reported from the Committee on Internal Improvements, would, if adopted, make one long step in the direction of a better public road system in Kentucky. This State is very far behind the procession in the matter of public roads, and will probably remain in that position unless some measures are taken to bring the subject more prominently before the people for practical consideration. The suggestions made in this resolution will cost some money to carry out the proposition, but Kentucky can well afford to expend a large sum of money for the chance, even, of obtaining such information as will point the direction of securing a public road system that will solve a problem which has baffled the skill of the statesmen of Kentucky for the past century. The proposition commends itself to every thoughtful member of the General Assembly now in session:

RESOLUTION relating to free turnpike roads.

WHEREAS, There exists a demand for a system of free turnpike, plank and gravel roads in this Commonwealth; and whereas, legislation looking to such an end is desired by all classes and all interests in this State; and whereas, it is believed such legislation would greatly promote the general prosperity of the people and the development of the general resources of this State; therefore, be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky: 1. That a commission, consisting of four persons, is hereby created and constituted, two of whom shall be appointed from the members of the House by the Speaker thereof, and two from the Senate, to be appointed by the President of said body, with full power to examine into and report upon the free turnpike, plank and gravel road systems of such of the States of the United States as have adopted such systems; and for that purpose said commission is hereby authorized to visit such States as they may select, and examine the condition and operation of such free turnpike, plank and gravel roads, the laws of the State relating thereto, the method of keeping and maintaining such roads in repair, the manner of their original construction, and whether constructed by the State or by public or private corporations, their cost, width, expense of maintenance, and such other facts as may be necessary to a complete and full understanding of such systems, and also, if such roads were constructed by private corporations, how and by what means the State or county, as the case may be, obtained the control of the same.

2. The said Commissioners shall report the result of such investigation to the presiding officers respectively of the House and Senate, at the earliest practicable time, with such suggestions as they may deem pertinent thereto.

3. The said Commissioners shall be paid their necessary traveling and other official expenses upon filing a statement of same with the Auditor, who shall draw his warrant upon the Treasurer for the same, payable to said Commissioners.

4. This resolution shall take effect and be in force from and after its approval by the Governor.

Let Us Organize.

There should be associations formed at once in every county in Kentucky to see that the county sends her best products to the World's Fair. Let the enterprising men organize and devise plans for that purpose. This is particularly necessary in the mountain counties, where individuals will do but little to advertise their own interests. These clubs can ask the County Court for funds and solicit individual aid. If we wait for the Commissioners to do it all we will be left. These organizations should call the attention of the Commissioners to the resources of their respective counties and proffer aid in getting out the specimens. This will enlist their effort and result happily for individuals, counties and State. Five men and three women can not, unaided, get out a full, fair exhibit of Kentucky's wealth. If each county works for its own interest, then and then only can we get the best results. Let all go to work.—Jackson Hustler.

Escaped "Trusty" Caught.

Red Hendricks, a convict, escaped from the warehouse of Mason, Ford & Co., last Friday. He remained in the city long enough to get an overdose of liquor, and about 3 o'clock he was seen at Bellepoint eating crackers and cheese. He was captured on Sunday near La Grange by Marshal Harlam, of that place, and returned to the walls.—Argus.

The Newspaper Man.

The following from the Paducah Standard is as true as preaching, perhaps truer than some preaching:

There is nothing that makes the newspaper man so weary as to hear frauds, dead beats and downright thieves talk about buying up newspapers—subsidizing the press. Worse rot was never uttered. No respectable paper is influenced by money and not one in a thousand can be approached in that manner. Instead of being bought up, newspapers rarely receive pay for legitimate work—work that really ought to be classed as advertising matter. But every scamp who is exposed through the columns of a newspaper seeks to bring the editor down to his own level by the cry, "Oh, he was bought up." The great trouble is that, out of good nature and sweet charity, the papers refrain from exposing any but the most notorious of scamps.

A newspaper man is as honest as his neighbor; is as good a citizen; he pays his debts as faithfully; he obeys the laws as cheerfully, yet there are always those who are ready to speak disparagingly of him—except when, as is often the case, they want a favor granted. A case in point is recalled. A newspaper contained an editorial paragraph which a gentleman thought did an injustice to a certain person. He sought the editor and explained the matter. The following issue of the paper set the matter right fairly and fully. The complainant, who had really never been referred to originally in the matter, when asked what he thought of the explanation, replied, "Oh, it was as good as you could expect from a newspaper man." Now why this invidious distinction? Is a newspaper man worse man than a Representative, a Senator, a lawyer, a farmer, a banker, a physician, or a lobbyist, who sneaks about under a cloak of love for the cause of education, and endeavors to influence men to favor his schemes? We think not; aye, we know he is not; yet every little fellow feels at liberty to use him, if possible, to forward his own petty schemes.

The honorable newspaper man holds as high a position as that held by the very first of other callings, and those who most despitely regard him are those least able to appreciate him or the high principles that govern his actions.—Frankfort Capital.

The Convict Outside the Walls.

Under the new Constitution convicts are required to be confined within the walls of the penitentiaries. There is no law authorizing them to act as "trusties," or to be employed on Capitol square. The State may work them on State buildings inside the walls, but there is no law authorizing the convict to labor even for the State outside the walls of the prison. The Constitutional provision on this subject should be enforced, for convict labor worked outside the prison walls has done the State and the Democratic party great injury.

The lessees can not work them outside, except upon the farm to raise supplies for the prison. All others should go inside the walls. There is no reason for a great State like Kentucky having convicts around her buildings, cleaning up her grounds and doing other labor. The State has no right to do this and we hope the Governor will see that it is stopped.—Western Argus.

The Anderson News advises the Farmers' Alliance to turn its attention to getting rid of sheep-killing dogs if it wants to do something really useful. Reports of the destruction of flocks come from every direction, and it is becoming a serious evil.
